Montpelier still continues to be such a warm town that a load of hay catches fire when it is hauled through the streets.

"Will Dewey come?" asks the Randolph Herald and News.

We don't know, but we believe that Dewey will not come.

The Newport Express and Standard pays this unsolicited testimonial to one of its subscribers, who has failed to pay up: "He has not one excuse for not paying. No sick excuse, no poverty excuse, no reasonable excuse. It is merely a perverse wilfulness on his part, a mulish hogghishness that a newspaper must shoulder and carry him for nothing." Certainly that subscriber has no plausible excuse from the contemporary's standpoint.

And some of our citizens think a bucket brigade is ample protection against fires! Would you think of sawing out lumber, today, with an old up-and-down saw? No! Well, it's fully as up-to-date as fighting fire with a bucket brigade. Better get a fire engine before it's too late.—Gorton Times.

There may come a time when it will be "too late." Fire has hit both sides of Gorton, and it might be Gorton's turn next. Marshfield and South Ryegate have already been tried by it.

PURITY OF COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

When President Buckham of the University of Vermont delivers an address to his students on athletics it may be taken as a sign that the athletic side of college life is becoming of not the least consequence, certainly. In his talk at the opening of the year at the state university President Buckham displayed a fine discrimination between the proper and the improper use of athletics. His definition of the two kinds are worthy of notice. He said:

"It is athletics as sport, as developing and manifesting the sense of physical powers, that exhilarating sense of virile power, which prompts men to climb mountains and swim torrents and dare dangerous seas together with that spirit of rivalry which brings this sense of power to a test and a realization; all this is manly and honorable and goes to the making of a complete manhood. But there is a bad side of athletics and it is pervading our institutions of learning and must be challenged and put out and kept out. This spirit comes in when athletics becomes a profession, a money making business, leading to fraud and trickery and base practices of many kinds. So long as the prevailing spirit is 'let us win if we can by fair and honorable means,' all will go well, but when it is 'let us win by all means, fair or foul,' then the game becomes demoralizing and it hurts men not only in their sports, but through and through. Every college, this college must decide, and quite largely the under-graduates must decide, which of these two spirits shall prevail."

No college or university can afford to rest supinely and allow its athletic side to lapse into that attitude of winning at any cost. And unless the college au-

We personally did not make the change in the style of Coats this season, but the change was made and the result is, no matter how good your last season's Coat may be, everybody sees it's a "back number," because it's so short. Our Fall Coats are all the new length.

authorities are watchful, over-zealous students who are in control of affairs will smother their athletic consciences—if the expression may be used—and go to unwarranted ends. There is probably no college in the country which has not at some time or other had to deal with this commercial aspect. Most of them have settled it satisfactorily by eliminating professionalism entirely. The moral tone of the college which condones trickery and underhanded methods in athletics is lowered, with the attendant effects on its students.

A Flea and Blood Story.

"Ruined Lives" is the title of the play blazoned upon the bill boards as the attraction at the opera house for next Tuesday. It is a comedy drama. Its story is a flesh and blood one, while its characters are human ones. And so cleverly has the author looked after the element of laughter that the entire unfolding of a double murder is presented to the audience in a most hilarious comedy scene between a Dutch butcher boy, an Irish section foreman and a tough girl of the slangy sort. Among the players to be seen are Will Crimmins, W. J. Shea, Harry Weston, Rita Harlan, Rose Leveille and Mildred Hyland. An elaborate staging will also be seen.

Millinery Opening.

Mrs. W. F. Shepard will have her fall and winter styles of millinery, Saturday, Sept. 30, at the Daylight store.
